Marc Andreessen Endorses a David Deming Podcast on the Labour Market

By Recommended Reading from Tech Founders • April 20, 2026

One organic recommendation stood out: a David Deming podcast shared by Luis Garicano and endorsed by Marc Andreessen. Its appeal was specific—it was recommended as a way to better understand the labour market and what people actually do in their jobs.

What stood out

Only one recommendation from today’s set produced a clear, organic learning signal: a David Deming podcast on the labour market, shared by Luis Garicano and endorsed by Marc Andreessen with a simple “Yep.” [1, 2]

What makes it useful is the reason it was shared. Garicano presented it as a resource from someone who “really understands the labour market” and who can shed light on what people actually do in their jobs [1]

Resource to queue

David Deming podcast on the labour market

- Title: Not specified in the source material
- Content type: Podcast [1]
- Author/creator: David Deming [1]
- Link/URL: Podcast page [1]
- Who recommended it: Luis Garicano shared it; Marc Andreessen endorsed it [1, 2]
- Key takeaway: Garicano said it comes from someone who “really understands the labour market” [1]

- Why it matters: The recommendation was framed around a specific gap in public discussion: understanding what people do in their jobs, not just talking about the labor market in the abstract [1]

“If you want to read or listen to someone who really understands the labour market, here is one excellent podcast by David Deming.” [1]

Bottom line

If you pick one resource from today, start here. The value is not just Andreessen’s endorsement; it is the clear rationale behind the recommendation: better understanding the labour market through the realities of work itself [1, 2]
